The Clarion

Oxford High School Magazine

The Oxford High School publication is well arranged and contains material of interest to every student, alumnus and friend of the school. This issue was dedicated to the citizens of Oxford.

There are timely editorials in that section; well written stories and poems in the literary department and numerous school notes of interest. Jokes under the head "Brite Lites" are humorous breaks and wise sayings heard during the year.

Pages devoted to sports carry complete summaries of boys' and girls' basket ball games played during the winter. Both teams did excellent work and matched more than the lion's share.

Among the half tones are pictures of the Clarion board; the graduating class; the debating team and boys' and girls' ball teams.

OXFORD—FORE STREET

Who says "climate"? Monday, May 23 it was too hot for comfort and then Wednesday morning to get up and find the thermometer registering six below zero, well, this is good Old Maine weather, but for all that we say give us good old Maine, the very best state in the Union.

Herman Thurlow and Albert Twitchell were in Leon Twitchell's back pasture, Sunday, May 22, calling on Alvin Lovejoy on their way home.

Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Brown took dinner at Irvin Brown's, Sunday, May 22. Mrs. Juggals is stopping at Roland Humphrey's.

Lawrence Brown brought two of his young heifers down to Leon Twitchell's back pasture, Saturday, May 21.

Mrs. Flora Cummings spent the week end in So. Paris, recently, guest of her cousins, Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Keniston. May 22 their daughter came with an auto and took her mother and Mrs. Cummings to a ride, attending the Congregational church services at Oxford for the morning services and on out in the country, where the apple blossoms were plentiful, taking dinner with a sister of Mrs. Keniston's, Mrs. Eli McAllister and family.

Mrs. A. Wills of Oxford village spent the afternoon of the 19th with Mrs. E. E. Twitchell.

Alvin Lovejoy is the busy man these days, selling his plants. We see load after load going by from there.

On Friday, the 20th, Mrs. Lawrence Brown took her car and her mother and Flora Cummings, also Mildred and Ruth Twitchell, to South Livermore to an all day meeting. It proved a beautiful day. They met friends from Auburn and Bridgton, as well as the South Livermore folks.

As we go riding by the Stearns house we hear the tap, tap of the hammer as he makes the inside improvements.

Mrs. Leon Twitchell, who was sick, recently, on the 20th, spent Saturday night, May 21, in Millettsville, guest of Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Brown.

Master Albert Twitchell had the bad luck to lose 140 chickens or more, May 22, by foxes; nice, heavy two pound to two and one-half pound chickens.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Gorman, who have been sick with the grip, are able to get out again.

Mrs. Leon Twitchell opened her tea room last week for the summer. Louise Twitchell is the clerk.

Rev. Adrian Walcott of Mechanic Falls was a caller at Al Twitchell's, the 20th.

Miss Mildred Smith of Oxford hung Miss Marion Twitchell a maybasket the evening of the 25th.

Another accident took place on this street, recently, when the horse of many years ago forgot its age and froliced about near Al Twitchell's white barn, throwing Elmer Twitchell out. The fruit remained undisturbed though the wagon was considerably demolished, one wheel completely smashed. But to peddle was the order of the day and soon another wagon was hitched to the one time Old Prince and on their way they went.

Miss Retha Glover called on friends the 24th, on this street.

The text of the sermon by Mr. Rhinier, is printed in full as follows:

In the Middle West both this and the other side of the Mississippi River, the traveler notices groups of little hills called prairie dog towns. As he approaches closer, he discovers a plump little animal or two seated upon each hill, curiously scrutinizing him and his movements. In appearance, the animals are about a foot long, of a very stout, squat, gray color, with low ears, very short tails and long, strong forelegs. The traveler notices all these details at some distance. As he draws nearer still, the animals disappear with lightning rapidity by shooting down the burrows, whose construction has made the hills possible. When the human visitor has passed, and glances back, he notices the animals cautiously emerge again to watch him. They use the hills as observation towers for they are always on guard against intruders. Prairie dogs live in colonies and by their appointment of watchmen are able to multiply and preserve themselves. Preyed upon by coyotes, kit-foxes, wildcats, hawks and owls, as well as by badgers and weasels and snakes, they have developed this attitude of being on guard to a very remarkable degree. They succeed best in their defense against rattle snakes. The moment one enters a hole, the prairie dogs sound an alarm and gather and proceed to fill the entrance with earth, packing it down, thereby sometimes entombing the snake forever. Most of their other enemies never attempt to enter their caverns and the little prairie dogs find safety by simply dodging down them when they spy a moving creature. It is this attitude of being on guard that I urge you to develop for your own personal welfare and for society's redemption. Each one of you is surrounded by influences quite as formidable, certainly as inimical, as the enemies of the prairie dogs. If these influences are heeded and if they master your wills, your lives will be the poorer, the narrower, the cheaper, the duller, the less wholesome, and society will be the less worthwhile, the less just, the less righteous, stimulating. Your only hope lay in always being on guard.

First, be on guard against pride. It is not my purpose to speak to you of the obvious. I am not now talking of the familiar types of pride such as pride in one's appearance, in one's family, in one's country. I am addressing myself to the eradication of a far more subtle kind of pride—pride in one's learning. St. Paul says that the proud know nothing.

It is just at this particular time in your lives that you have an over-zealous estimate of your own wisdom. All of your lives you have been learners, first as small children in the home, then as scholars in the primary schools, and next as students in the grade and high schools. It certainly would seem that at last you had come to a peak of knowledge. In addition, your fancy has turned to an independent existence under your own roof, shared by some member of the opposite sex. If you have dreams of such an existence, then, surely, you reason, you will be capable of it. If you are capable of it, you reason further, your wisdom must be as great as that of your parents. But your reasoning is false. Most of what you have learned thus far must be unlearned, that is, it must become so much a part of your mental equipment that it has equal force with instinct. Not until you have reached the realization that you are comparatively ignorant have you come to the age of genuine wisdom. You may hasten that realization by a visit to the Library of Congress in Washington or to any other large library. When you see the thousands of books on the shelves about every conceivable subject, you may again be overcome with humility. In this attitude, learning is an easy process. As Jesus said, "He that shall humble himself, shall be exalted." He shall be full of knowledge.

Second, be on guard against the spiritual dangers of specialization. No one of you will soon be devoting yourselves wholeheartedly to some life work. To be successful in your occupation you will be required to not only know a lot about it, but to constantly incorporate in your knowledge all that is new in your field, discoveries that are made from time to time, labor-saving devices, money saving contrivances and methods, and so on. To keep up-to-date you will be compelled to read at least one trade journal and the new books that are published, which bear directly on your profession or occupation. In addition, you will want to attend the meetings of the association to which you belong for mutual advancement in your field. All these activities require time. And since there are only twenty-four hours in a day, you will find that your schedule does not permit of much leisure. Your work will haunt you. It will sap your energy. It will cost you much anxiety, much worry, much thoughtfulness, and when you have finished at the office, or at the laboratory or in the schoolroom, the temptation will come to spend the few hours until bedtime in the most frivolous pastimes, repining neither thought nor concentration, but only animal well-being.

Specialization, unless consciously and seriously offset by purposeful indulgence of interests and hobbies, inevitably leads to a narrowing, a blighting, and a circumscribing of life. Life can be full, rich, absorbing, interesting, multiple-centered or it can be narrow, blighted, circumscribed. Each one of you has the power to decide which yours shall be. You can pattern your life after a specialist like Edison or you can pattern it after Leonardo da Vinci, the jack of all trades and master of one. We give precedence to da Vinci's painting and include him among the greatest of the masters of all ages. But, we must not forget that he preferred to be known as an inventor. As a very young man he wanted to raise the baptistry at Florence and set it on a new base of marble. For the Duke of Milan he built tanks, testudines with double covering, dray-horses inside the shell and embrasures in the cope. At the same time he applied himself to the problem of canalizing the Ticino River and connecting it with the Italian lakes. At fifty he wanted to transform Florence into an ideal city, actually planned the canalization as it was later carried out, and proposed streets with an upper and lower level, connected by steps, the upper level for promenade, the lower for commercial traffic. He invented modern chimneys, self-closing doors, and roasting spits turned by currents of warm air. Meanwhile he renewed an old plan for canalizing the Arno from Pisa, to do away with the silt deposits in the river by the use of embankments. In his old age he laid out a network of canals in France. In his earlier drawings of all periods of his life he designed hydroplanes and the first parachute, diving bells and the submarine. He tried to use steam as a means of propulsion, designed the first steam motor, made powder, constructed a glass oven and a still. He built machines for sawing, spinning, shearing, washing, pottery-making. He constructed artesian wells, all sorts of mills, scales, the conserve mirror, and the pendulum. In the realm of theory, he observed the accelerated motion of a falling body and found the law of the square before Newton. He not only constructed the block and tackle, but was the first man since Archimedes to record the principles of the lever. In drawings which he made for the study of difficult problems in physics, he developed the law of the conservation of energy. When wandering over the Maritime Alps he discovered mussels on the mountain tops and founded the science of paleontology. Before Galileo he discovered the law of virtual velocity. He stated the principles of gyration and the vortex, and the law of communicating vessels. He was the founder of hydrostatics and of the entire science of hydraulics. He understood the undulatory motion of the sea, and applied its principles of transmission and reflection to sound and light; he measured sound-waves, explained the echo and the vibration of overtones four hundred years before Helmholtz and Herz. Besides all these accomplishments he was a musician, both composer and instrumentalist and vocalist, a designer of costumes, a brilliant conversationalist, a sculptor, an architect, a philosopher, and author of one of the world's most interesting diaries. Thomas Edison sinks into comparative oblivion beside this genius of another age. One thing is certain—specialization cannot give the world another Leonardo da Vinci. I call you to be jacks of all trades and masters of one. No one can know everything, but anyone can know something about everything and a great deal about something. And even if your knowledge of a subject is not extensive you can nevertheless have a genuine interest in it. Thus, life will be more adventurous and less dull. It will be more engrossing and less routine.

Third, be on guard against an exclusive scientific spirit. Life loses much of its glamor and interest and elusiveness if everything is weighed and measured and charted. Alfred Noyes in his poem, "Protagonists", shows the folly of spending one's time in tracing origins, submitting everything to ruthless examination and working out formulae as explanations. He dropped into the orchestral universe As one who strives to trace a symphony Back to its cause, and with laborious care Feels with his hand the wood of the violins, And bids you mark, O good black, honest soul, So fearful of false hopes!—that all is hollow. He tells you on what tree the word was given. He plucks the curtain, tells you where it came. Gives you the name and pedigree of the cat; Says, even affirms a mystery, and will talk Of sunny dark vibrations that affect The feebly instruments of the human ear; And so, with a world-excluding accuracy— Oh, never doubt that every step I feel! He tells the great music into less than air And misses everything.

Everything! On one side The music soaring endlessly through heavens Within the human soul; on the other side, The unseen Composed of whose transcendent life The music speaks in souls made still to hear He clings to his verse, cuts. In that law He saw the way of the Power, but not the Power determining the way.

The cautious scientific attitude has its value in aiding material progress in quelling superstitions, and in helping us to understand our universe. But when it is exclusive and will not give equal authority to our inner experiences and their interpretation it has gone too far and needs to be checked. For, then, it makes the man a scoffer and a cynic. The exclusive scientific spirit is apt to take the individual away from the game of life and make him take a seat on the sidelines. Instead of being a player he is an on-looker. At a swimming pool he watches the participants and criticizes their technique, calls their fun foolishness, and their innocent recreation folly. But while he is so employed the swimmers are enjoying themselves immensely. They are living. He is removed from life. He is as removed from reality as the astronomer in Walt Whitman's poem:

When I heard the leav'd astronomer,
When the proofs, the figures, were ranged in columns before me,
When I was shown the charts and diagrams,
To aid, divide, and measure them,
When I sitting heard the astronomer where he lectured with much applause in the lecture-room,
How soon unaccountable I became tired and sick,
Till rising and gliding out I wander'd off
by myself,
In the mystical moist night air, and from time to time,
Look'd up in perfect silence at the stars.
I call you, then, in the third place, to be on guard against the exclusive scientific temper, which will take you away from immediate and glorious and adventurous living.

If you will be ever watchful you will be able to live lives of great usefulness—lives filled with energizing experiences and rich in achievements. If you are eternally on guard against pride in your knowledge and are humble in learning, if you are constantly on guard against the spiritual evils of specialization and develop broad interests, and if you are forever on guard against the exclusive scientific temper, your lives will be blessed and a blessing.

Athletics

Good Playing Won Cups and Good Name
Athletic activities the past year have brought to the high school silver cups and a good name among other schools in the class.
Football, a major sport, opened the season in September for a brace of agile players, many of whom qualified at heavy weights, under the coaching of Jimmy Cole. There were eight letter men, but the break was even with three wins and
